Casual Saints™ talk broadcasts invoke the soul of -

- A verbal dance in the style of Last Call with Carson Daly if he led the coquettish genius of historian Bettany Hughes
- Your rapt attention to the most enthralling, personal stories of The Moth
- The low rumble of a secret marriage between racer Danica Patrick and psychic John Edward
- Huell Howser's amazement while riding shotgun on a Greenpeace blockade
- The Dalai Lama's presence of peaceful compassion spoken aloud by Robert Downey, Jr.

"The planet does not need more successful people. The planet desperately needs more peacemakers, healers, restorers, storytellers and lovers of all kinds."

~ Geshe Tenzin Zopa

Each 60-minute Casual Saints™ show discusses exciting a la carte with -

- Interviews of leaders in thought, action and play from around the world,
- Intriguing talk about exemplary, real ground-breakers in: exemplary living, natural health, animals, medicine, graceful aging, psychonauts, and personal spiritual leadership

Genuine, first-hand examples of how to live happily and in joy are sparse in most western media. We are often instead inundated with the darkest examples of who not to emulate: World Wrestling Federation anti-heroes, leaders of corrupt governments, and leaders of rapacious transnational companies. Yet renowned psychologists, behaviorists, educators, and even company leaders agree - that to be happy, content and successful, every audience must know what their own happiness, contentment and success look like.

No one and no society's going anywhere fast unless and until they possess their own spectacular, personal narrative, and unless they first fall in love with their future. Most audiences don't appreciate that this is even possible, and it must be shown to them by inspired people who've actually done it.

The Casual Saints theme song was composed and performed by Jason K. Norris, Ph.D., with lyrics by producing host Mike Austin.
